Job description / Tasks to be developed:

Research Group:

The Molecular Pathology of Lymphoid Neoplasms Group, led by Elías Campo, is a strong interdisciplinary research team focus on the study of lymphoid neoplasms. The group is interested in understanding the genetic, epigenetic, and molecular mechanisms underlying the biological diversity of these tumors and how they may influence the different clinical evolution of the patients. The group has contributed significantly to the knowledge of these tumors and it is an international reference for these diseases.

Project and Job Description:

The Group is looking for a highly motivated graduate with wide experience in molecular and cell biology. The selected candidate will work in a project aimed to investigate the molecular mechanisms of genomic instability in aggressive lymphoid neoplasms. The project will focus on the study of the mechanisms driving the biological and clinical diversity of Mantle Cell Lymphoma (MCL), an aggressive lymphoid neoplasm considered incurable with current therapies. Previous studies have shown the relevance of CCND1 and SOX11 oncogenic events in MCL deregulating different oncogenic pathways. The candidate will study how CCND1 participates in the generation of chromosomal instability, a hallmark of MCL and its possible cooperation and whether the oncogenic effects of cyclin D1 are modulated/regulated by SOX11.

Presentation of applications:

All documents must include the reference code of the job offer (see upper left corner of the call).

- Candidates must enclose a motivation letter and their Curriculum Vitae (including list of publications).
- Proof of the merits exposed and the degree obtained must also be included in the application.
